For example, def task1(): return 1 def task2(): return 2 def task3(): return 3 def task4(): return 4 Then, at the top of the code I will have def main(): # do stuff here How would I go about storing the functions in a dictionary and having it look like this: defs = { 'task1': task1, 'task2': task2, 'task3': task3, 'task4': task4 } I would like to be able to use the function, in this case task1, and not have to do a lookup in the dictionary every time. A: First, what you want to do is called a dictionary of functions. Then you need to rethink your design, because this is not what you want. Dictionaries are used to store mappings between keys and values, so you can't easily map one function to another. Consider using an object that holds a function, which can then be called at runtime: class Func(object): def __init__(self, name): self.name = name self.code = None def __call__(self): if self.code is None: self.code = compile(self.name, self.name, 'exec') return self.code() def task1(): return 1 def task2():

MSG File Reader Crack + PC/Windows [Latest 2022]

KEYMACRO is the fastest and most efficient Mac OS key remapper available on the market. With over 700+ fully customizable key macros, KEYMACRO allows you to instantly perform any task on your Mac with a single keystroke. You can assign up to 10 different keyboard commands to any key combo. WHY USE KEYMACRO? In the past, the only way to perform multiple keyboard shortcuts with one keystroke was to use the + and – keys to append or remove key presses. This meant having to press two keys for every single shortcut you wanted to create, and it was error prone and confusing. Now, with the introduction of the right mouse button, this has become far easier, and the best way to remap keys in Mac OS is by using KeyMacro. Seamlessly remap Mac OS Key Combos with KeyMacro Use Keyboard Shortcuts to Get Things Done Quickly Keyboard shortcuts are standard features of every operating system, and you can use them to quickly access all sorts of features and applications. But, you have to know which keys you need to press, how many keys you need to press, and most importantly, which of those keys are remapped. That is the reason why key remapping apps and tools have been invented in the first place. KeyMacro allows you to assign any number of keyboard shortcuts to any key combo. By assigning different keyboard shortcuts to all of your system keys, KeyMacro makes it easier to use your computer. Every KeyMacro Key is Accommodated to Work with Different Mac OS Versions The KeyMacro package comes with hundreds of fully customizable key macros. Each key combo is mapped to a completely unique keyboard command. These commands have been tested to work with every version of Mac OS available to date. The Keyboard Shortcuts are Seamlessly Integrated to the OS KeyMacro seamlessly integrates your keyboard shortcuts to the OS menu bar. From the keyboard, it's as easy as pressing a single modifier key. That's right, you don't have to learn a separate, new set of keyboard shortcuts. When to Use KeyMacro KeyMacro is extremely useful for users that have only a few specific keyboard commands that they want to assign frequently. If you want to open a specific folder, you can assign a shortcut for that particular task. Say, if you want to close a folder, you can use the Del key, or if you want to view the top most email in the mailbox 1d6a3396d6
