The goal of this study was to test the hypothesis that genetic and environmental factors play a role in the etiology of bipolar I disorder (BP-I). To test this hypothesis, we genotyped 678 single-nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in 685 bipolar-I patients and 972 healthy control subjects for association with BP-I. All participants underwent a structured clinical interview for the diagnosis of BP-I. We replicated associations with BP-I at several loci. We also observed suggestive evidence for association with several gene variants (P
