Many optical, electro-optical, opto-electro-optical and microelectromechanical (MEMS) systems and devices are capable of functioning correctly only within a certain temperature range. When these systems are turned on or operated outside of the optimal temperature range, undesirable and often unpredictable results occur. Since these systems are typically components of equipment, tools and apparatus, including automobiles, aircraft and missiles, which operate in environments that can vary from near zero degrees Fahrenheit to as high as 200 degrees Fahrenheit, there is a need for reliable, accurate and inexpensive thermal sensing devices that can be used to determine when these systems are operating within the optimal temperature range. When electrical or optical signals are transmitted through or generated in a semiconductor material, the signal is degraded by the build-up of electrical or optical charge on the semiconductor surface. The electrical or optical charge buildup is a function of the type and magnitude of the signal and can be represented by the formula: $Q = \sigma T$ (
