Q: C# Namespace: Class Name I am trying to find a good way to separate classes in a large project into namespaces. For example, I have a "global" namespace that has various classes that are used for various purposes in my application. I have classes that are specific to a certain page, such as a login page, that would not go into the global namespace. Is there a good way to structure these classes? I know I can have them in the same namespace as my global class, but then I would have to prefix everything with the name of the class that the method/property is in, which seems like a huge hassle.

A: Use the same package for all the classes in your global namespace. Put the classes for the page in the same package that contains the global namespace.

Image copyright AFP Image caption Norway and Russia signed a loan agreement worth $1bn to fund energy and gas projects in Norway in October 2014 Norway's state pension fund has sold all its shares in a company controlled by Russian billionaires to avoid being embroiled in a dispute over the Kremlin's alleged meddling in the country's politics. Norway's pension fund, the world's fourth biggest by assets, had bought a 12.2% stake in Gazpromneft, one of Russia's largest gas producers, in 2013. The fund is now divesting as part of its reform plans. It is leaving the stake held by Gazpromneft to concentrate on investments in US and European equities. Gazpromneft is controlled
