The year is 2013. The planet is dying. And even though the ocean is slowly acidifying, a team of scientists, economists and engineers are about to find something that will change the world forever...or kill it. The big players are looking to snag some kind of precious new resource for their big corporations to ensure their existence on this planet. Everyone is betting on the results of a new scientific expedition. Yet, only one scientist, Anton von Kamp, knows the answer. Anton is at the very centre of a global geopolitical crisis: a key member of the team exploring a mysterious moon that's said to be two inches thick. But when Anton mysteriously vanishes, his colleagues at the head of the expedition are left to make a decision that will have consequences they could never have dreamed of. How the team decide what's more important - science or survival? Orphan has been designed to tell a rich story through breathtaking graphics, a cinematic soundtrack and a compelling plot about the fragile future of humanity. Gameplay - Controls: Anton is a control freak. He likes his games precise. He's not interested in shortcuts. He's one of the group's main characters. He therefore uses a keyboard. Four game modes are available in Orphan: • Exploration: You must extract the moon's resource and venture further into the moon's terrains before everyone else gets there first. • Emergencies: You must fly the plane far away from the moon, endangering your life and the lives of your fellow passengers. Orphan uses a neat system of undo and retry. • Survival: The ultimate test of your skills in command and attention to what is important. Keep flying the plane, while at the same time trying to rescue the passengers and find the missing scientist Anton. • Disaster: You must literally steer a course to avoid obstacles and avoid crashing into the moon. If you do, your mission is over. (No spoiler, be aware that all the game modes above are accessible through the main menu) So how does a plane captain steer a plane without a rudder? Relax, you don't need a fan of plane captain simulator to play Orphan. It will take a few minutes to get the hang of the controls. (Play the tutorials, it's really simple) Player vs Player: As with all of the games we create, Orphan is a Single player game: it's not a multiplayer shooter. If you want to challenge others, join the <analyse> So its all fine. The problem is when I try to validate my html. The tag is underlined in red, showing warning that some content is missing. When I look at the source code all the way to the end, I see the punctuation mark at the end like this: So how do I get rid of this warning? A: I was able to solve the problem... What seemed to be the problem was an HTML problem. I used an external HTML parser, called HTML Minifier < It works great, but you need to choose the one that you want. I chose HTML Minifier Lite Free version. The Lite version is very, very similar to the Pro version. The one I used was HTML Minifier Lite Free with Hungarian language packs. Some of the translations were missing, so I proceeded to Google to find a solution. That's when I came across a women's blog, that described the problem, and a solution. The problem is that the missing quote was not a problem for HTML Minifier, and that's why I couldn't get a warning that I didn't have the missing tags.

I added Unicode blanks to the last code, which looked something like this: <analyse> And now I have no warnings. <analyse> We use cookies to improve your site experience and provide information about resources on our site.
