A former Brown University student has just been sentenced in US court for leaking details of her sexual encounters with two attractive male athletes on the Ivy League school's campus. Anna Kotzur, then 18, used her Facebook account to post nude images of herself and of her former boyfriend, a swimmer, taken by her female friend without her permission. The photos appeared to be intended for the student's circle of friends and were viewed nearly 4,000 times after she posted them. The pictures helped lead to the athletes' arrests, with one man pleading guilty to the felony charge. The other was acquitted of the charges. Kotzur, now 22, was sentenced last week to two years' probation and community service. She also was fined $1,000, ordered to write an apology letter to the men and perform 100 hours of community service. The case is noteworthy because it shows how easy it is for information -- any kind of information -- to spread online and to be viewed by a wide audience. Kotzur's acts might not have been against the law if she had not posted the images on a public wall. That made it possible for people other than Kotzur's small circle of friends to view them. But social media have allowed friends and acquaintances of college students to watch how their peers behave and make

NetworkDriveReconnector Crack + X64

------------------------------ I have a problem with my network drives after upgrading from Win2000 to WinXP Pro. I had trouble for a long time with my printer drivers on WinXP, to which I had to reinstall the printer drivers on WinXP each time the network print server was booted up and the driver updated. That's why I was looking for a solution to solve that, and I found this one. There are differences between Windows XP and Windows 2000, and the way network drives are viewed in one of them is different. Windows 2000, like other Windows OS, doesn't recognize network drives that are not available at boot up time. To solve this problem, I have written this script. It adds three registry entries in

HKLM\Software InstallRundLL How to Use NetworkDriveReconnector:

-------------------------------- 1. Download this script and place it in the folder containing your network drives that you want to have this script be run on. 2. Right-click on the "NetworkDriveReconnector.reg" file and choose "Run", or, if you're using Vista / Windows 7, click "Run as Administrator" and choose "Run". The script will run, and when it finishes you'll be able to access your network drives from your desktop. 3. Any time you need to reconnect your network drives, you will have to do it manually. If this script still doesn't work for you, have a look at my other script for the same purpose (HKEY_LOCAL_MACHINE\Software\Microsoft\Windows\Current Version\Run) ... If you use a router such as Linksys or Cisco for your home network, you can share the internet connection among all of your devices such as your computer, printers, cellphones, Xbox, etc. You can also share your wired internet connection with your wireless device such as your home computer, so that you're not paying for internet service that you don't use. Figure #1. Sharing your wired internet connection How to Share Your Wired Connection Figure #1 (figure modified) In this case, you've connected your PC to your router (with a wired ethernet cable) and your router is connected to the internet with wireless LAN capability. Start your Internet connection on your computer. Turn on Internet sharing, which is located in your PC's Control Panel. Click Start>Settings and locate the

NetworkDriveReconnector For Windows

NetworkDriveReconnector's goal is to guarantee that users can always access their network drives and store data on these drives. The program synchronizes and reconnects network drives. You can configure the program so that it updates the drives only once a week or more often if needed, which saves you on a network bandwidth. NetworkDriveReconnector can also unmount existing network drives on the system if the drives are no longer available or users no longer have access to the drives. NetworkDriveReconnector runs automatically after each computer startup and also when network connection changes. Advantages of NetworkDriveReconnector: NetworkDriveReconnector is an easy-to-use network drive connectivity tool. A major advantage of using a tool is that most of the time it does the job automatically. You don't have to worry about the connections. All you have to do is simply remove your current network drive connection on the network and re-install it. You don't have to worry about the time, you don't have to wait until the drive to be re-connected. If your drive is not available, you don't have to wait for your computer to be available to you. You don't have to wait for the network connection to be reconnected. Stop me if you've heard all this before, but if you want to do any sort of productivity on your Windows based computer, you need a network drive. No, I didn't say anything about setup. I mean you want to be able to store stuff and be able to have access to that stuff wherever you are. You can actually set up a removable drive, but the problem is that you have to be connected to your network in order to pull it out of your machine and plug it in to your network and plug it into your machine. The other problem with that approach is that your machine might not be available. If you have both of these problems, then you might want to think about using an application that will do a lot of the work for you. How about an application that will do just that? Here is what we think you might be looking for, Network Drive Connector. NetworkDriveReconnector is such a great application because it can re-connect to the network drive and also un-mount existing network drive of your system. It also gets rid of any stale connection to your network that will normally go down when your computer is not connected to your

What's New In NetworkDriveReconnector?

-------------------- This utility was written for the user who has many networked drives and wants them to be available automatically after network connection. This utility will reconnect all the drives every 5 minutes as long as you choose "ON" in the program. You can also change the time interval to your prefered schedule. Uninstallation: -------------- The program will uninstall itself the first time you run it, if the uninstaller is present. If not, you can uninstall it manually by using the Control Panel. Last edited by lnw on 12/12/2008 6:57:26 PM; edited 4 times in totalary information
