To open an archive in a read-only format, right-click on the archive and then select Properties. The Properties dialog box will appear, as shown in Figure 83. Click Security, and then select the option that is Read-only. The next time you try to open an archive that is not read-only, the archive will be opened with the read-only option already set. This option is only available for Windows. Though High Politics is an op-ed series in which Arizona State University students write about the intersection of politics and policy in the United States. The majority of Phoenix's public schools are designated as low-performing by the federal government. Now, Phoenix schools are fighting back. Phoenix Union High School District (PUHSD) has agreed to join a private, high-performing education program called Rocketship, where students complete a rigorous school-based curriculum in one year and have the option to finish an associate degree in two years. The Phoenix School Board is currently deciding if PUHSD will extend the lease of this high-performing school to students in the district. Rocketship has been lauded by education reform advocates for its "college prep" approach. Currently, school district parent representatives are divided over the program's benefits, as students still repeat courses at the end of their first year, but District Superintendent Kathy Sussol said that the program will address this issue. It is important to note that Rocketship requires students and their families to pay for some of the program's costs, and the school district still has a hefty amount of debt. Rocketship accepts approximately 1,200 students in 40 schools, which reflects the limited private education options for parents looking to place their children in the Phoenix area. Meanwhile, PUHSD is forced to retain low-performing, and overcrowded schools. Rocketship and the Phoenix School Board are currently in
