

introduction: a disproportionate number of african americans are arrested for crack cocaine offenses. while the crack cocaine epidemic peaked in the early 1990s, increasing disparity in arrest rates persists. the primary aim of this study was to examine whether race, neighborhood and socioeconomic status (ses) were related to crack cocaine use and if there was a difference between those who were arrested for a crack cocaine offense and those who were not. a secondary aim was to examine the relationship between arrest and crack cocaine use. participants: from the neon and new trials, the present analysis included adults who were either arrested or not arrested for a crack cocaine offense in the 12 months prior to the trials. in the neon trial, 1,285 were arrested for crack cocaine offenses, and in the new trial, 2,242 were arrested. of these, 2,034 provided substance use data. in the new trial, 1,836 individuals were arrested for crack cocaine offenses, and 1,418 provided substance use data. measures: the dependent variable in both studies was the reported lifetime use of crack cocaine. data on arrest history were collected for the 12 months preceding each study, whereas substance use data were collected in the 6 months preceding each study. substance use variables included the prevalence of cocaine use, past-year crack cocaine use, past-year cocaine use and crack cocaine use in the past 30 days, cocaine use in the past 6 months, and cocaine use in the past 30 days. in addition, the numbers of days in the past 30 days with cocaine use and cocaine use in the past 30 days were calculated.

black individuals are also incarcerated at rates five times higher than their white counterparts, even though black and white americans use cocaine at similar rates. it is important to note that crack offenders, who are overwhelmingly black, are responsible for the vast majority of the growth in the prison population over the last decade. crack offenders were responsible for about 40 percent of the increase in the federal prison population over the last 10 years, which is due in large part to the dramatic increase in crack cocaine offenses. crack cocaine is the most harmful drug in the united states. it contains the same amount of cocaine as powder cocaine but is significantly cheaper. because of its low price, crack cocaine is very addictive and causes a lot of damage to the brain. crack cocaine causes much more damage to the brain than does powder cocaine, and that is why more people get arrested for crack than for powder. because it is so addictive and causes such harm, crack cocaine should be banned. crack cocaine is pure cocaine, just like powder cocaine. it has the same chemical composition, has the same effects, and is the same drug. crack is as bad as powder cocaine. it is the police who have tried to claim that crack is somehow more harmful than powder cocaine. crack cocaine is not a new phenomenon. it has always been around, along with other cocaine forms such as cocaine paste, cracker, cracker dust, rock candy, and cocaine hydrochloride (crystal cocaine). the only difference between crack and powder cocaine is the price. this is why the crack cocaine that is sold on the street today is different from the crack cocaine that was on the streets in the 1980s. 5ec8ef588b
