Most people who get suspended from Apple's iOS Developer Program are for excessive attachment to their phones and the distractions they pose. It's a painful lesson that most of us learn the hard way. iPhone development guru and iOS lead designer Alan Dye was one of those people who found that the devices' many possibilities and limitations also made it a worthy platform for learning. He got into the program a few years ago and started a project to share what he learned in the process. Now that he's finished, the iCode will be a one-stop shop for iOS
